Ladies and gentlemen
Sitting by the fire
Pity us poor boys
Out in the mire.

This blithe ditty can be heard echoing through towns and cities of Scotland on New Year's Day, when bands of children, some in masks and costumes, go from house to house wishing good cheer and asking for money or something to eat.

New Year's traditionally has been the biggest annual feast day in Scotland. But somehow between the docks of the British Isles and the shores of the American Colonies, the practice of dressing up and visiting homes became associated with Halloween.

Nonetheless, welcoming the New Year with festivity is among the oldest and universal of man's observances. The date of New Year's Day has bounced all over the calendar since ancient times, but throughout it all man has demonstrated an innate urge to celebrate when the year finally rolls over and calls it quits.

The earliest known New Year's parties were corked long before the Royal Canadians and the Waldorf even were thought about. Around
